"THE BLIGHT THAT FAILED"

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

It is in these words that Charles Scribner's Sons, well known American publishers, characterize the failure on the part of the Christian Science Church to suppress their recently published life of Mary Baker Eddy, written by Edwin Franden Dakin. In a pamphlet which accompanies this biography significantly entitled, "Mrs. Eddy, the Biography of a Virginal Mind," the whole astounding tale of its suppression is revealed.

The book was published in August of this past year, and was immediately greeted with utmost enthusiasm by the foremost American critics. "It is a persistent, documented, remorseless dissection of a personality," wrote R. L. Duffus in the New York "Times." Heywood Broun remarked that Mrs. Eddy, that "amazing woman, looms three dimensional, credible and engrossing from its pages;" while H. L. Mencken designated Mr. Dakin's book as "well ordered and competently written . . . a valuable contribution to American history;" and the London Times Literary Review hailed it as "the standard work for those who would understand and reckon with its subject once and for all."

But not so in the camp of the Christian Scientists. No sooner had this biography found its way to the shelves of the booksellers than hordes of Mrs. Eddy's posthumous champions swooped down upon it in a fevered and furious attempt to smother it. Shouting the convenient shibboleth, coined by the clever Mrs. Eddy herself, which provided that "no member of this church (of Christ Science) shall patronize a publishing house or a bookstore that has for sale obnoxious books," the "Christian Science Committee on Publication" called forthwith on booksellers and libraries in every state in the Union with the request, in many instances tantamount to a demand, that this "obnoxious book" be banned from their places or at least hidden in remote corners of their shelves. But if the booksellers, possessing just a spark of moral integrity and self determination, were just stiffnecked and stubborn enough to remain adamant and politely to refuse these presumptuous "petitions" then the effective club of boycott was brandished in their very faces. The files of Scribner's are filled with letters from their agents containing such plaints as these: "It is not for us to enter into any discussion of the Christian Science point of view," writes a leading San Francisco bookseller, "but it certainly will not be politic for us to appear to stand sponsor for this book." From Atlanta, the following: "We beg to advise that Atlanta has a number of followers of Mrs. Eddy who resent us having this book on sale. We do not feel that it would pay us to antagonize this class of people." From Detroit, "Due to the violent protest of the Science Church in our city and the boycott on our store by these good people, we have been forced to withdraw the sale of your book from our store."

These quotations are from but a few of the myriads of letters which flowed endlessly into the offices of Scribner's from almost every city of the United States, from Canada, from places as remote even as Honolulu in the far away Hawaiian Isles, illustrating the tremendous pressure which this church marshalled forth for the express purpose of suppressing this biography which Samuel Harden Church, president of the Carnegie Institute of Technology termed a "masterful and illuminating book."

But even further than this did these enterprising avatars of Truth (and in Science truth is always capitalized) proceed to go. Directly to Scribner's came sheafs of letters from every section of the country; letters, which strangely enough, although originating in places far distant one from the other, "were alike in their central idea and varied only in introductory and including phraseology," letters which threatened to boycott and to ruin the old and reliable house of Scribner's. Subscriptions to Scribner's Magazine were cancelled and accounts at Scribner's book store were closed. "Letters were vindicitive; not a few were abusive."

And so efficient and extensive was this propaganda that during October and November sales so diminished that it seemed at first as though the efforts of these crusaders were to be crowned with a signal victory and it was greatly feared that ere the American people could be awakened to the catastrophe, this book would be submerged amid the overwhelming flood of Fall publications. But like all such attempts at suppression the attack proved abortive in the end, and flew back as a boomerang against its proponents. Aroused by this challenge to liberty of expression and this meance to a free press, the finest spirits in the United States joined in a counter crusade against those who sought to cow the publishers and purveyors of this book into a craven submission. The Saturday Review of Literature, one of the most representative of American literary publications, in a leading article scored the Christian Science campaign in no uncertain terms: "This case is significant because not a law, but extra legal methods, have been used in the attempt at suppression. It may well become a test case in American freedom. If an honest life of 'Mrs. Eddy' is boycotted because a Christian Science committee does not approve of its interpretation, we have a clear case of extra legal means used to bring about a suppression which no principle of criticism can justify. There is one obvious solution to the disagreable episode. Order a copy."

And this advice of the Saturday Review has been heeded. As one organization after another stormed in protest against this wholly unwarranted suppression which, if "allowed to pass unchallenged would constitute a precedent dangerous to the commonwealth, (and which if) universally followed would constitute a new tyranny," telegrams poured into the publisher's offices frantically pleading for more and more copies. For the public's interest had been awakened and the public craved to know the truth. The attempt at suppression became in very truth the "blight that failed" as the book has in the short space of a few months exhausted three editions.

But wherefore such a stir? Why so much "ado about nothing?" The answer has been suggested by the Saturday Review. Order a copy of the book and you will perhaps understand better the great concern on the part of the Christian Science Church. None of us desires to have the veil removed that our idols' feet of clay stand revealed before the eyes of a prying and incredulous world. Lewis Mumford struck the most pregnant note when he wrote in the New Republic, "Mr. Dakin has committed an unforgivable offense against Mrs. Eddy: He has done her justice."

POOR BLOOD

The blood is an important constituent of the body. About one-twentieth of body-weight is blood. The blood serves to bring to the tissues oxygen from the lungs and food from the digestive tract. It carries away their waste products from the tissues to the organs of elimination. The internal secretions from the ductless glands are circulated in the blood.

It is evident that the proper nutrition of the body and the removal of wastes depend upon the blood's doing its part in these two important functions.

The blood is subject to certain diseases, but we are not considering actual diseases of the blood, such as the anaemias, but rather that condition which many people speak of as "bad blood" or "poor blood." This is heard of often in the spring when people say that their blood is in bad condition.

When such persons are questioned, it is generally found that they are feeling somewhat miserable, run-down or below par, and they blame their blood for their unfitness. If they have pimples, boils or other signs, they regard these as evidence of bad blood, and consider that this condition is nature's way of ridding the blood of impurities.

The mode of living of most of this group is a story of neglect of all those habits of life which must receive reasonable attention if health is to be maintained, physical fitness assured and freedom from the ill-effects of neglect of the needs of the body avoided.

The reason why the complaint regarding bad blood is more frequent in the spring, and for the foundation of the popular idea that spring tonics are required is because, during the winter, many people live an unhealthy life. If, during that season, exercise, fresh air, bathing and such matters are neglected, and particularly, if the person continues to eat as much as when he is working hard, then the body suffers.

The condition of unfitness is not due to the blood's being poor or bad, but because the whole body suffers from a lack of care. This can be prevented by a proper moderate diet, by fresh air, exercise, body cleanliness and care as to elimination. Spring tonics are not required. It is not through medicines that we keep our bodies healthy; it is through a proper manner of living. The way to "purify the blood" is to attend to the body, to eat properly and eliminate regularly.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Marriages

Trager-Gillick

The marriage of Miss Ida Gillick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Gillick, to Morris Trager, son of Mrs. F. Trager, was solemnized Sunday, March 2, at the home of the bride's parents, St. Urbain Street. Rabbi Herschorn officiated.

Halickman-Weinstein

The marriage of Mary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. Weinstein, to Isidore Halickman, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. M. Halickman, was solemnized Sunday, March 2, at Bnai Jacob Synagogue with Rev. Katzman officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. Shulman. Over an eggshell satin gown fashioned on long lines fell her veil of net arranged in cap effect and caught at either side with clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of Ophelia roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Her sister, Miss Irene Weinstein, as maid of honor, wore a gown of pale green satin and pale green and pale pink tulle, fashioned on long lines, pale pink shoes and a pink mohair hat trimmed with green tulle, and she carried a bouquet of roses. Hyman Berson was best man. The bridesmaids, who wore gowns fashioned on the long lines, were Misses Dora Offshiger, in peach color tulle; Alice Cohen, red chiffon; Lily Kahansky, pink and green georgette; Goldie Cohen, white taffeta trimmed with green; Ida Berson, peach color satin; and Gertrude Cohen, red georgette. They all wore mohair hats trimmed with tulle to match their gowns and shoes to match and carried bouquets of roses. The groomsmen were Moe Silver, Sam Mallack, Max Weinstein, Phil Savage, Abe Ballington, and Harry Gurevitch. The flower girls were Baby Shulman, in a pink tulle frock; Helen Udashkin, a blue taffeta frock; and Helen Kossy, peach satin. They also wore hats of tulle to match their frocks and carried baskets of rose petals. Jack Weinstein was page boy. Mrs. Weinstein, mother of the bride, wore a black georgette dress on long lines; Mrs. J. Shulman, aunt of the bride, black georgette; Mrs. N. Weinstein, aunt of the bride, dahlia georgette; Mrs. W. Udashkin, sister of the groom, fawn georgette on long lines; Mrs. S. Cohen, sister of the groom, black lace; Mrs. H. Moscovitch, sister of the groom, black georgette trimmed with rhinestones; Mrs. H. Berson, sister of the groom, white moiré; Mrs. J. Halickman, sister-in-law of the groom, green georgette dress; Mrs. M. Halickman, sister-in-law of the groom, bottle green georgette; and Mrs. H. Halickman, sister-in-law of the groom, green chiffon dress. A reception for 150 guests was held at the Carmen Sylva. Mr. and Mrs. Isidore Halickman are spending their honeymoon in Ottawa. Going away the bride wore a black crepe dress trimmed with white satin fashioned on the long lines, a black broadcloth coat, and a bottle green felt hat, and suede bag to match.

Rabbis Deny Soviet Persecution

The Moscow press published a statement from Minsk credited to Rabbi Menakhem Gluskin and Rabbis Yarkho, Masel, Kerstein, Gabrielov and Zimbalist, sharply condemning foreign attacks upon Soviet religious policy.

The statement said that no rabbis had been shot in Minsk or elsewhere in Russia.

The signers were quoted as saying that they had heard with deep indignation that a Paris rabbi had participated in a service conducted by the metropolitan Evlogii, "a notorious inspirer of Jewish pogroms in Czarist Russia."

They also expressed indigation at the "Pope's call for a crusade against the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics" and said they could not understand how it was possible to mention religion in connection with an appeal which might lead to great bloodshed.

All but three of the fourteen rabbis reported to have been under arrest by the Soviet Government of Russia and threatened with execution have ben released, according to a message received by Senator Borah, from Maxim Litvinof, Acting Commissar of Foreign Affairs at Moscow.

Senator Borah, explaining the message, a reply to an appeal from him, said:

"I have received word this afternoon from Litvinof, Acting Commissar of Foreign Affairs, stating that all of the rabbis who were under arrest have been released except three.

"Among those released I understand is Rabbi Vlaiskin. I feel reasonably certain that the three not released are not in any danger of execution."

Senator Borah sent a message appealing to the Soviet Government to release the rabbis. He said he had so acted in behalf of many Americans and that he did so independently of the State Department because this government has no official relations with Soviet Russia. In sending the appeal to the Soviet Government Senator Borah merely asked for information and did not assert, as reported, that the rabbis were facing execution.

The Soviet Government has had a friendly attitude toward Senator Borah because of his advocacy of recognition in opposition to the United States Government's policy from the very day that the then Secretary of State Hughes declared emphatically against recognition.

RABBI ANDRON DIES

Word was received of the death in Jerusalem of Rabbi Samuel Isaac Andron, one of the founders of the Zionist movement in America.

Rabbi Andron, who was 75 years old, had lived in Jerusalem since 1922. He was the first vice-president of the Zionist organization in this country.

ELECTIVE BODY TO HANDLE SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS IN PALESTINE

At Jerusalem, the Jewish community ordinance establishing a Jewish commercial assembly to handle religious and social problems has been ratified and its text published in the official gazette. The ordinance is signed by Ben Zvi and Meyuchas Solomon on behalf of the Vaad Leumi and is approved by High Commissioner Chancellor.

It provides for an elected assembly of 71 members, the same number as the old Sanhedrin, the elections to be held within a month after the publication of the ordinance. All registered Jewish men and women 20 years of age or more are entitled to vote. All over 25 knowing how to read and write Hebrew are entitled to be elected.

The Government has withdrawn the former stipulation regarding citizenship so that any resident in Palestine of more than a year may be a candidate for the assembly.

The Sephardic and Yemenite communities are granted the right of representation in the assembly according to their proportion of the Jewish population and irrespective of the number of electors.

Samuel Blum, the hat maker, agreed to do the marketing for the household while his wife was absent on a trip to the South. The first morning after her departure he visited the grocer.

"I want a head of cabbage," demanded Mr. Blum.

"Large or small head?" asked the grocer.

"Oh, about 7⅛," absent-mindedly answered the hat maker.

Selfishness is so often mistaken for artistic temperament.

A loss of temper is also a loss of character.

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

"MOTHER" MARY EDDY

If you have friends who are flirting with Christian Science, do advise them to read Edwin Daken's book—"Mrs. Eddy, the Biography of a Virginal Mind". It is one book which students of "healing cults" ought to read with great delight. Of course the followers of Eddyism are not at all pleased with this volume. It reveals a lot concerning the life of Mother Eddy which is rather distasteful—but these revealations are based on documentary evidence. In a word, the biography is most amusing.

According to Mr. Daken, Mary Baker Eddy from her very childhood suffered from physical and psychical disturbances. She showed a pronounced tendency to attacks of temper, hysteria and sudden pains in the spine. In other words, Mary was subject to "fits". And in search for a cure Mrs. Eddy very early sought homeopathy, magic, healers and charlatans. Dakin suggests that Mary Baker learned the art of "healing" from the celebrated Phineas Quimby, a healer well known in the history of New England States. Of course Mrs. Eddy added to "Quimbyism" the idea of "malicious animal magnetism", possibly borrowed from the "mesmerists", with whom she came in contact in her youth.

It is interesting to note that despite Mrs. Eddy's contention that disease was only an illusion, her ill health continued. Of course this she traced to malicious animal magnetism issuing from her enemies who had set up rival "healing shops".

Mr. Daken definitely shows in this well documented book that the numerical strength of the Scientists is highly exaggerated. Professed Scientists constitute a very small sect. Their imaginary numerical strength is created by the wonderful system of propaganda carried on by the mother church.

Of course after reading this book and many similar volumes, nervous and neuresthenic Jews will still seek out the healing cults. It is an old phenomenon. The search of magical or mental cures from physical ailments are old as the hills. Yet historically Judaism was ever opposed to magic. The soothsayer, necromancer and enchanter were not popular in the midst of Israel. These were considered an abomination to the Lord. In Judaism, health or physical well being depended on righteous conduct. When illness did come, prayer to God was essential but with it the medicines were employed. It is true that the Chassidim in the Middle Ages and even at present do practice "faith healing" all which is based on psycho-therapeutics—a law so well recognized in Modern Medicine. But our people, as a whole, have ever been rational. The physician occupied a unique place in the community of Israel. No finer tribute to the healer of physical ailments is found in any other literature than that of Ecclesiasticus (Chapter 38)"

"Honour a physician with the honour due to him for the uses which he may have of him: for the Lord hath created him.—The Lord hath created medicines out of the earth; and he that is wise will not abhor them—Then give place to the physician, for the Lord hath created him; let him not go from thee, for thou hast need of him".

If Jews would live the Jewish life-set aside time for Jewish meditation and prayer—they then would receive that serenity and calmness of mind, so essential in this hectic, nervous, dizzy machine age. Jews then would not need to search out magical and mystical cults in order to find balance in this struggling universe.

The joy of life for Jews can be found in Yiddishkeit, not in the cult of Eddyism. Judaism is a religion for normal thinking human beings. Mother Mary Baker Eddy is a Goddess for the abnormal and the neuresthenic. And even for these, neurology, psychiatry and mental hygiene can be of greater genuine benefit than the cult of Eddyism.

WHAT'S THE GOOD OF IT?

A devoted Jewish friend doubts the value of "Good Will" meetings between Jews and Christians. He labels such gatherings as empty gastures. The other day this friend wrote me a lengthy note intimating that all those amity conferences are not worth anything. I beg to differ. While it is true that right after these fellowship meetings we do not see Jews and Christians "falling in love with one another"—this much can be said in defense. Fellowship meetings are even worth while if only they keep Jew and Christian from "falling into hate with one another". That alone warrants amity conferences. Remove hate, then will follow understanding and perhaps love. We must all work to hasten the time which William Watson foresaw:

"When people shall as forests grow,
Wherein the oak hates not the pine,
Nor beeches wish the cedars woe;
But all in their unlikeness blend
Confederate to one golden end".

FORMER EDITOR SAYS IT WAS NOT HIS IDEA

Montreal, Feb. 28, 1930

Editor,
Canadian Jewish Review,

You recently belaboured a new Jewish weekly in Toronto for using the slogan, "By Canadians for Canadians," or: "Controlled by British subjects, etc." Kindly publish this, my disclaimer as to originating any such declaration. Nowhere in any of the issues edited by me, or in any of the printed leaflets on which my name appeared as Editor, can any such "slogan" be found. I do acknowledge, however, authorship of the daring announcement that the new weekly would "support CANADIAN Jewish literary talent in practical fashion" . . . from which, surely, no sinister inference could be drawn! Responsibility for the other pronouncement must be attached to another source.

Yours truly,
Hyman Edelstein (late Editor (?) of the Jewish Standard).

Announcement was made of the acquisition of common stock control in the Mount Royal Hotel unit of the United Hotels Company of America by P. A. Thomson of Nesbitt, Thomson & Company.

The deal involves at least three quarters of a million dollars. The price for the common stock is stated unofficially to have been $25. a share and for the preferred upwards of $75. a share. The purchaser, who is understood to have acted for his personal account, was given immediate control of the undertaking.

On his return to the city this week, Ernest Rossiter, general manager, St. Lawrence Paper Mills, said there was no statement to be made as yet regarding the proposed merger of St. Lawrence Paper, Brompton and Lake St. John Power & Paper. Asked as to when an announcement was likely to be made, Mr. Rossiter was non-committal, merely stating:

"We have been hoping for the last two months to be able to make an announcement."

There are persistent reports that some new American interests have been large buyers of Abitibi common during the past six months. This accumulation has been regarded as of particular interest and it is considered the new group are likely to be important factors in an adjustment of the newsprint situation as as between the different Canadian and American interests.

The main reason for this view is that in addition to their recent acquisitions of Abitibi, they had previously been largely interested in International Paper Company.

There has been very good buying recently of Brazilian Traction, according to interests close to the market for the stock. It is considered that given more favorable general conditions in the market, Brazilian is one of the stocks that would be taken in hand and moved to higher levels.

The annual report of the Canada Power & Paper Corporation, covering the year to December 31, 1929, just now available, shows that notwithstanding the conditions that have existed in the industry, earnings from operations and income from investments exceeded all bond and debenture interest and preferred share dividends, even after customary and liberal deductions totalling $2,521,878 for depreciation and depletion. After all deductions, there remained a balance of $125,907, to be added to surplus.

The financial statement of the Abitibi Power & Paper Company, Limited shows earnings for the year equal to $1.97 per share on the company's common stock outstanding, as compared with $1.33 per share in the preceding year. Net working capital is shown at $13,071,726 at the end of 1929, as against $12,097,188 at the end of the preceding year, an increase of nearly a million dollars. A feature of the balance sheet is the reduction of bank loans from $5,000,000 to $1,750,000 in the current statement.

Nickel Profits Show Gain of Almost 100 Per Cent

NET operating income of the International Nickel Company of Canada, Ltd., for the year ended December 31st last, amounted to $26,624,949, from which was deducted $2,241,383 for depreciation of plants, $813,451 for depletion of ore, $886,051 for retirement system and $448,066 for interest on debenture stock and purchase money notes, leaving a net profit of $22,235,996, compared with a net profit of $12,399,317 for the preceding twelve months.

This increase in net earnings is attributable not only to the inclusion of Mond's earnings but also to a substantial growth in consumption of the company's products.

The current figures, as mentioned above, reflect the inclusion of the Mond Nickel Company and its subsidiaries while the figures for 1928, include only the International Nickel Company of Canada and its then subsidiaries.

After deducting from the above earnings an amount of $2,040,501 for preferred dividends and $12,375,703 for common dividends, the balance carried to surplus was $7,819,791, making the earned surplus $24,958,970 at December 31st, 1929.

The earnings for 1929, after allowing for preferred dividends, were equivalent to $1.47 per share on the basis of the 13,758,208 shares of no par value common stock now issued or issuable as compared with $1.05 per share for 1928 on the 11,258,208 shares then issued or issuable.

Additions to property account, less recoveries, amounted to $21,497,608 and the amount written off for dismantlement was $322,256, leaving net additions $21,175,351. The total property account, after deducting reserves for depreciation of plants and depletion of ore, is $136,298,357 as compared with $59,860,441 at December 31st, 1928.

Net current assets of $32,231,839 are in excess of last year's figures by $1,768,364.

Mining & Oil

The balance of profit and loss carried to the balance sheet of Waite-Ackerman-Montgomery Mines, Limited, for the year 1929 amounts to $484,903, after liberal write-offs, according to the annual report, just released. Gross recoveries were $1,071,175 including $1,013,574 from copper, $30,264 from gold and $27,337 from silver, while interest and discount brought total revenue up to $1,077,978. Operating costs, including administration were $463,965, leaving net before appropriations of $614,012. This was equal to 60 per cent of gross.

With silver selling under 41 cents the outlook for some of Cobalt's producers is anything but bright. Nipissing is one company which will be hard hit. With silver at 43 cents the company is earning, plus their income from investments, approximately half of its 30 cents per share dividend. The company has about 1,200,000 shares issued and the payments require some $360,000. In its lifetime, Nipissing paid out almost $30,000,000 in dividends.

The results to be obtained during the remainder of the current year on Noranda Mines will have a vital bearing on the future of the company. With the work at 975 feet in depth having disclosed the "H" ore body which appears to be the source of tens of millions of dollars in high-grade copper gold ore, and with no development having been done below that horizon, it is only natural that vital importance centres about the results to be obtained now that the shaft has finally reached 1500 feet in depth.

Production of Central Manitoba Mines in January showed a considerable improvement over that of the two preceding months, having a value of $33,553 from 4,343 tons of ore treated, compared with $26,238 in December, $27,403 in November and $41,103 in October. During the first nine months of the company's fiscal year, which ends on April 30th, production totalled $310,932, an average of $34,548 per month, against $509,646 in the twelve months ended April 30th, 1929, an average of $42,470 per month.

An operating profit from the mine of $79,978 is shown in the annual report of the Siscoe Gold Mines, Limited.

With the first year's operations as a producer on a small scale, the company mined 29,836 tons of ore having an average value of $10.53 per ton, yielding $307,403.

For the purpose of continuing with a broad development plan of considerable magnitude, with a view to placing the property in a position where greatly increased production will be possible, the directors will ask the special general meeting of the shareholders to authorize an increase in the capital stock of the company.

A decrease in tonnage milled and an increase in operating expenses for the past year are revealed in the annual report of Dome Mines, Ltd., for the period ending December 31, 1929.

The tonnage milled during the period was 452,000, as against 548,000 for the full year 1928.

Production was maintained normally until the destruction by fire of the mill. Since, mining and developing has been carried on at a reduced rate. The work of clearing away the debris is being accomplished as rapidly as weather conditions permit, the report says, and a clean-up plant, which has been installed in the refinery, has resulted in the ruins being cleared up as far as possible.

ited, according to authoritative information. It is understood the company has sufficient funds to pursue the active exploitation of its immense ore resources. The annual statement, which will be released early in March, is expected to reflect an improved state of affairs in the industry up to the end of their fiscal year on December 31st.

Famous Players is experiencing progressively good results this fiscal year, of which the first six months have elapsed. Each month showed an expansion in earnings over the corresponding period of last year. Growth in earning power has been greatly pronounced in the past two years. In 1926, net available for the common was only 11 cents per share, increasing to 85 cents in 1927, to $1.44 in 1928, and then jumping to set a new high level at $6.24 per share in 1929. As a result of the company's more recent growth and the fine promise for the balance of the year, directors could increase the dividend on the shares and still be adhering to a conservative policy.

Jewish Farm Population Grows

In thirty years the Jewish farm population of the United States has increased from scarcely 1,000 persons to 80,000 to 100,000, according to the annual report of the Jewish Agricultural Society. On Feb. 12 the society will have been in existence thirty years.

Speaking of farm settlement, the report says that eighty-nine more Jewish families were established on farms last year.

The area under cultivation by Jews in the United States is estimated at 1,000,000 acres. The report says:

"All told, 451 farms were examined and appraised and 89 families comprising about 460 souls were established on farms in Connecticut, Delaware, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. The cost of these acquisitions totaled the respectable sum of $492,156, an average of $7,132 per farm. The average capital possessed by families settled was $3,977, somewhat larger than last year. The average cash payment per farm was $2,319, also slightly larger than in 1928. The balance remained on mortgage. To help finance the operations, our society made thirty-four loans aggregating $52,391 and averaging $1,540.92. The others were able to start under their own resources."

With the exception of 1928, more persons turned to the society for advice on farming possibilities than in any year since 1920, the beginning of the period of farm deflation, the total number being 1,246, coming from fourteen States and from Canada. Half of these reported a capital of $3,000 or more and only 8 per cent on $1,000 or less.

The report says that the lack of farm credit is a problem which perplexes the Jewish farmer, especially as he is strange to his environment and new to his calling, and that 477 loans totalling $305,692 were made to Jewish farmers in the United States in 1929.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

From Toronto Saturday Night, issue of March 1: "Canadian Zionists are opposed to agitations liable to cause public controversy and endeavored without success to dissuade certain of their fellow Jews from holding the public parade and demonstration in Massey Hall some months ago."

From the report given at the recent Zionist convention in Montreal by M. Gelber, of Toronto vice-president of the Zionist Organization of Canada: "A very large parade was organized in our city in which over 15,000 of our people participated. It was wonderful to see old and young marching side by side on the street."

From a September issue of Saturday Night: "Up to the time of going to press neither Rt. Hon. Ramsay MacDonald, Britain's Prime Minister, nor Rt. Hon. Arthur Henderson, his secretary of Foreign Affairs, has vouchsafed a reply to the lengthy resolution passed by the assembled Jewry of Toronto at Massey Hall Sept. 5. The resolution was a lengthy and nonsensical rigmarole the eighth clause of which contained the following peremptory utterance; 'Finally we demand a complete and public re-statement of the policy of the government of Great Britain that shall make clear and indubitable its intention to carry into effect the purpose of the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate over Palestine granted it by the League of Nations.' Perhaps the members of the British government have been too busy to study the Toronto resolution. Perhaps if they did, they, like some other people, would regard it as unmitigated cheek. Reading between the lines it would appear that the Toronto demonstration was originally planned as a semi-seditious demonstration against Great Britain and that the more intelligent and moderate elements of the local Jewish population intervened to suppress the disloyal aspects of the project. At any rate the expressions of loyalty to Great Britain were in striking contrast to the false accusations that the British government has shirked her responsibilities under the Palestine mandate and the insulting implications of Clause Eight in the resolution above quoted. It is probable that most of the speakers were as ignorant as their audience of the terms of the Balfour Declaration. We do not suppose that any of those who paraded behind banners demanding. 'The Right of Our People to Live and Work in Palestine' have any intention of going hither themselves or that the speakers who cried aloud for more Jewish immigration to Palestine are yearning to set sail immediately."

It is gratifying to recall that so powerful and independent a paper as Saturday Night has sometimes recognized such a thing in Toronto as "a more intelligent and moderate element of the local Jewish population." Extreme pessimism would envelop thousands of Jewish citizens if they thought that the world at large lumped them helter skelter with a certain handful of over-heated Toronto Zionists as "the assembled Jewry of Toronto."

Leaders of Jewish communal effort in all parts of the United States and Canada will meet Saturday, March 8, and Sunday at Washington, D.C., to set the wheels in motion for the Allied Jewish Campaign which will seek to raise $6,000,000 for 1930 for the work of the Joint Distribution Committee among the destitute in Eastern Europe and Russia, and for the Jewish Agency for Palestine. Felix Warburg, chairman of the J. D. C., and chairman of the Administrative Committee of the Jewish Agency, will be honorary chairman.

The Jewish Agency includes the constituent organizations, the Keren Hayesod, Hadassah and the Mizrachi. It was created in Zurich in August, 1929, and includes Zionists and non-Zionists pursuant to the terms of the British Mandate over Palestine whereby it was agreed to call upon all classes of Jews in the development of Palestine. To meet the needs presented by the reconstruction of Palestine and the rehabilitation of Jews throughout Eastern Europe funds collected will be divided to give $3,500,000 to the Joint Distribution Committee and $2,500,000 to the Jewish Agency.

The work of the Joint Distribution Committee since it was organized in 1914 has been stupendous. It has spent $100,000,000 in reconstructing the lives of East European Jews where they have been faced by extreme poverty and diverse political and economic conditions. It has fed, clothed, sheltered and given medical aid to the victims of war and pogrom and by the assistance of free loan societies and self-help agencies has saved millions of Jews from annihilation and pauperism. Vocational schools, hospitals, cultural institutions and activities, Jewish colonization in Russia, and industrialization of the Jewish populations of Poland, Russia and Lithuania are part of the work undertaken by the Joint Distribution Committee.

With more and tighter limits being placed upon immigration the work of the Joint Distribution Committee must become a fixture before the eyes of the entire Jewish world. A bill establishing quotas for immigration to the United States is not without its echoes. The Malan bill now before the South African Parliament will permit not more than fifty immigrants per year to be admitted from all countries except, of course, those of the Nordics. Australia, having decided to cut its quota in half, will keep out thousands of immigrants from countries where Jews with anxious eyes scan the horizon. How much longer will some of the South American republic maintain a liberal policy in immigration? Immigration restriction as a policy is catching. This condition leaves millions of Jews in a trap with nothing to face except lives without hope and filled with despair. In helping these Jews their brethren more fortunately placed can ally themselves freely regardless of all differences in what Felix Warburg rightly calls one great, common Jewish cause.

The Island Within

A Novel by Ludwig Lewisohn

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

He had been perfunctorily introduced to his colleagues on a visit the week before. He now met them at luncheon; Dr. Duval, a swarthy, sleepy-eyed man of thirty-five; Dr. Kirke, young, thin, short, with bright gray eyes and an extremely inquisitive nose; Dr. Lowden, a crushed, emaciated, golden-bearded person of at least forty; and a thin, worn, straight-lined, mouse-colored spinster, Dr. Hopkins, who must have been pretty in a cool, precise, eternally virginal way twenty years ago. They all greeted him cordially enough. "Glad to see you, Doctor." They called each other "doctor" with an amusing frequency and persistence. It was evidently a comfort to them.

"Room all right?"

"Very nice," Arthur said.

"Grub's not so good recently," Dr. Lowden grumbled through his beard. "But you're new to it. Lemme give you a bit of advice right now, Doctor Don't stay too long in institutional practice. It ruins a man."

"Listen to the old sour-ball," Duval shouted. "You oughta been stuck away upstate like me. That's no fun, sure. But here with two nights off a week in ll' ol' New York—I'm not complaining."

Little Kirke expanded suddenly like a bathing sparrow. "If you fellows spent more of your evenings studying you'd get ahead both scientifically and professionally. Do you read German, Dr. Levy? I'm just working through Kraepelin. Tough, all right. But that Hun knows his stuff."

Arthur admitted that he read scientific German and knew Kraepelin thoroughly. He added that he was a little d'sillusioned with all the descriptive and diagnostic stuff. He felt sure that future research lay in a different direction.

Kirke fluffed himself out a little more. "What do you mean exactly, Doctor?"

"I mean preventive therapeutics partly through educational direction and partly through psycho-analysis?"

"Hot dog!" Duval shouted, and laughed.

Dr. Hopkins, who was sitting next to Arthur, murmured: "I don't see how you can go in for that disgusting stuff, Doctor. Why, it's positively immoral!" Her lips tightened.

But Kirke's nose was high. "I'd like to discuss that at length with you some time, Doctor. But we'd better visit the wards now."

Arthur was, of course, thoroughly familiar with hospital architecture of this type. The attendant's key clanked behind them; the heavy door slammed. Before them lay the long circular running hallway carpeted with hideous sickly brown linoleum, imperfectly lit by heavily barred windows. Off the hallway lay the bedrooms of the patients. But these were locked by day. The patients loitered or walked or crouched or lay on benches of wood in these halls and in the occasional window niches in which on a small table stood a rusty artificial palm. The hospital was evidently crowded to its utmost capacity. There were women of all ages and all types, from wild-eyed adolescents to ancient crinkled crones. A few mumbled or hummed; a very few walked agitatedly up and down. But the great majority were apathetic with a hopeless, horrible empty apathy which changed, if only by a glance, to swift animal suspicion and fear as the doctors with the attendant behind them came in sight. The place was clean; it was, in fact, almost too obviously scrubbed; no doubt it represented a vast advancement in both humanity and comfort over the institutions of even a few years ago. And yet it was indescribably unhuman, fetid despite its cleanliness, sordid with an overwhelming sordidness that went beyond anything physical, tangible, describable, but hovered in the air like a great foul bird with bitter eyes. . . . They met female attendants—untrained, cheaply gay young women who smirked at the doctors and, seeing a new one, laid obviously hypocritical hands of kindness on this patient or on that. Fear leaped into the eyes of the patients thus touched. Here and there Arthur saw blotches and discolorations around the eyes and on the cheeks of the younger and probably more troublesome patients. . . . He looked at them; he looked at the attendants; he looked at the cool, self-important face of Kirke. What a seemly sort of a hell this was! . . . Kirke talked:

"You observe, Doctor, how very crowded we are. The war has caused

In all of which there is a profound lesson for ourselves. Truth will out notwithstanding boycotts and suppression. The world today craves above all else reality and any attempts to conceal the facts in any controversy or debate, any attempts to whitewash a cause or a personality in this skeptical and questioning age ends in frustration and in the ultimate triumph of the just cause unjustly attacked. At any rate, read Dakin's "Mrs. Eddy," that you might become acquainted with a most extraordinary woman, a "vital, unusual, and fascinating person."

Addressed Toronto Hadassah

Toronto Hadassah heard that the Jew to-day stands on trial before the nations of the world, when Rabbi James Heller, chairman of the national executive of the Zionist Council, spoke Monday night in the King Edward Hotel. He was referring to the recent riots in Palestine, which, he said, had been greatly exaggerated in the press of the world.

While these riots had been no more important than those of 1919 and 1921, and no more significant than those which colonists had to face in every pioneering movement, they had raised the query in the minds of the peoples that the Jews might not be able to work out their own destiny; that their claim to Palestine was based on British bayonets.

All the Jews in Palestine asked, said Rabbi Heller, was the same protection as they received in any city of America. He asserted his conviction that the report soon to be handed down by the British Commission would enunciate those principles of British justice and fair play which had always characterized the jurisdiction of Britain in all parts of the world.

"Here are five suggestions!"

Starting out with simply washing your clothes and returning them to you damp, we have five different ways of handling "family wash." You may select the particular service that best suits your own household laundry problem. These five services are priced according to the stage of completion the wash is taken. You pay accordingly—but all prices are extremely moderate—well within the reach of the average housekeeping budget. Phone to-day and have a chat with our young lady, or stop any one of our courteous drivers.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honorable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

an immense increase in insanity, especially among the foreign element. And you see that most of these women are foreigners. That complicates our problem. Half of them don't know any English. I sometimes wonder why we should take care of them at all. Still, you can't I suppose deport them all."

Arthur didn't look up. But he asked: "Are there attendants belonging to the various nationalities who can interpret for the patients?" He caught Kirke's sidelong suspicious glance.

"Well, hardly, Doctor. You're a New Yorker; you ought to know. These jobs are within the gift of state and city politicians. The attendants are mostly Irish."

Arthur walked more slowly. His instinctively diagnostic eyes were absorbing more and more. He could tell the specific malady of nerves or mind from the Krankheitsbild of each of these patients: from motions, gestures, colorings, eyes, nails. From the atmosphere that hovered over each. Also, of course, he distinguished the human elements. Poles, Italians, Germans, Jewesses, Jeweases, Jewesses. . . . More and more and more. . . . His heart contracted. . . . Suddenly he was afraid. Afraid for these women of his people in the hands of the contemptuous doctors and attendants. . . . Good God! what nonsense! He was a scientist. An American. The Poles and Italians and Germans were in no better case. . . . Yes, they are, something within him said, yes they are. . . . He stopped. An emaciated, middle-aged woman with ragged blond hair and high, Slavic cheek-bones was walking up and down. She turned her head incessantly to look behind her; she swung her long arms back and forth. She stooped suddenly and whirled around and pointed an outstretched arm and finger at an old woman crouched on a bench and whispered, as her pupils expanded unnaturally: "Yid!" . . . Arthur's mind kept stupidly repeating the phrase: Yes, they are. . . . He stopped before the old woman at whom the Pole had pointed. She was a small old woman very neatly dressed in black, with white hair parted in the middle, clasping a clean white kerchief. She did not move; she did not raise her eyes. A mountainous dejection seemed to drag her down into the very earth. Arthur looked up. Kirke nodded.

"Sure, involutional melancholia. Arteriosclerosis, of course." He bent forward a little. "How are you, Mrs. Rosenberg?"

A pair of dark eyes in which all the sorrows of all the earth seemed to be concentrated. "Vy can't I die, Doctor? Vy don't you give me somet'ing to make me die? I'm such a burden." It was a weary thread of a voice.

Kirke exchanged a glance with Arthur. "The reason I know her name is because her family are perfect pests. Two sons and their wives. I've told them and the superintendent has told them that these senile cases are always hopeless. They don't seem to believe us. They come running here on visiting days and try to get extra privileges and extra food and bribe the nurses. We have similar cases, but none quite so bad. But then all these uh—uh—these people are neurasthenic themselves."

A curious thing happened. Arthur heard himself say: "Why didn't you say 'Jews,' Doctor? I wouldn't have been offended. There is a high percentage of nervous and mental disorder among Jews."

Kirke gave a little relieved laugh. "Right you are, Doctor, we're fellow-scientists. Yes, the percentage is high. And, understand, I don't blame the sons of the old lady for their feeling. Only they don't do her or anybody else any good."

They made the rest of the rounds rapidly Kirke admitted voluntarily that the cottage system ought to be introduced and that this herding of innumerable patients of all types in a single building was rotten and thoroughly out of date. The one thing he was proud of was the room with the three continuous baths for "violently disturbed patients." Here, in three bathtubs, with white pillorled heads in clamped boards, three young women were immersed in tepid water.

"Manic-depressive cases, as you see, Doctor. It weakens them. But raving weakens them even more."

Arthur assented. He assented outwardly to everything. Privately his opinion that average neurologists knew nothing but words and that hospital treatment of the insane hadn't evan begun to be studied, was depressingly and overwhelmingly confirmed. . . .

V

He plunged into his work with a feverishness that he had not known before. He could not dawdle in his barren room. On his nights off in New York he was restive and ill-at-ease. The conversations of his colleagues on Drew's Point after dinner annoyed him. Duval chattered like a horrible overgrown adolescent. Lowden told smutty stories whenever Dr. Hopkins wasn't in hearing distance. That lady herself usually announced that she was going to her room to read her chapter in the Bible and pray and retire. Kirke seemed to be the only rational creature. He invited Arthur to his room and the two talked shop. Only it soon became clear to Arthur that Kirke, perfectly honorable and straightforward in the matter, was not interested in the study and cure of disease, but in his career. If he prepared case histories it was for his career; if he plugged away at scientific German, it was for that. He was going in, he informed Arthur, for hospital management. He realized that he didn't have, perhaps, the personality to become a metropolitan specialist. He would try for the superintendency of some great state institution.

"Look at Foster," he said.

Foster was the superintendent on Drew's Point. Arthur didn't want, Heaven knows, to look at him—the exquisitely garbed, cool-faced, calculating diplomat who impressed politicans as the very ideal of a scientist and had long forgotten the little he ever knew. Arthur had ben duly invited to dine with the Fosters. Dr. Foster's single scientific observation had been to the effect that as Americans we couldn't possibly go in for that degenerate, dirty Freudian stuff. . . . "It revolts every decent instinct in one," Dr. Bryant Foster had remarked with that heavy British accent which he cultivated despite his vaunted Americanism. . . .

Arthur spent much time with his patients. He talk to them; he watched them; he brooded over them. He found that he had a calming influence over them. Faint, faint shadows of smiles would sometimes arise in his presence. And that was remarkable. For the insane laugh wildly or despairingly. But they do not smile. He persuaded some of his patients who were capable at intervals of attention, however ill-sustained, to try to tell him about themselves. When, during their outdoor hours, the older women would be sitting on benches under the trees of the island, he would sometimes sit down quietly beside them and talk to them quite as though they were normal. His retentive memory made it possible for him to note down their words immediately afterward. He wrote out, for his own benefit, case histories which were like human stories. He became more and more convinced that wherever the hypothesis of alcoholism or luetic infection was definitely excluded, insanity meant a break-down under the too heavy pressure of life, a cracking of the psyche under moral suffering, a flight from a world grown intolerable. There were, to be sure, the physical parallel phonemena, like old Mrs. Rosenberg's arteriosclerosis. But since no one had ever been able to establish the slightest causal nexus between these parallel phonemena, on the one hand, and the psychic disturbance, on the other, and since practically all these diseased states were known to exist without the accompanying insanity, Arthur came thus early to the conclusion that the future of at least preventive medicine in his field lay, with whatever developments and modifications, in the direction pointed out by Freud. . . . Meditating upon these matters at his desk, late at night, beside his green-shaded lamp, smoking a last cigar, he found his thoughts drifting in directions familiar and yet strange. He wondered suddenly whether Hazel was happy, as happy as his mother said. . . . He had a strong visual image of Hazel during bright, fiery, unhappy moments of her adolescence. . . . The delicate sensitive girl had felt the disadvantage of being a Jewess just the one added burden that seemed too much. . . . She had made little attempts to escape into unrealities: little falsenesses, snobbishnesses, flirtations with an alien religion, foolish little denials and suppressions. . . . Escape into the fanciful and unreal, into a world unlike the world of experience as given. . . . Flight from experience. . . . Yes, the mechanism of the Jewish anti-Jewish complex was precisely analogous to the mechanism of insanity. . . . He had felt this urge toward flight himself, flight away from a reality that had no inner meaning, from a burden that seemed irrational. . . . The Freefields, Eugene Adams, Joe Goldmann, his brother Victor—they were all in flight from a disagreeable reality whether their flight was toward pomp and patriotism or toward a technique of life which would insure Gentile society or toward dreams of a world-revolution that would set the crooked straight, or merely toward a cloud of arrogant disputatiousness in which all voices were silenced save one's own. . . . He got up. His cigar was finished. Determinedly he put aside these reflections for some vague future. . . Analogies were notoriously deceptive. . . . Yet if insanity were in many cases merely a violent exaggeration under excessive pressure of processes and techniques of the so-called normal psyche—then . . . then. . . . . He was sleepy. What was certain was again that your conventional neurologist was a wretched empiric, a shallow scientific opportunist who hadn't even established a connection with the causes of things. . . .

He didn't know, he hadn't considered whether his studying of the patients had been noticed. He came into the dining-room rather suddenly for luncheon a few days later and saw the bent and intimate backs of Lowden and Duval as they sat together—the inimitable posture of men gossiping or telling dirty stories—and caught the coarse though softened voice of Duval: "That Yid is certainly nuts on nuts." He sat down heavily and took up a magazine. Lowden and Duval shot up, came over, were oily in politeness. He acted as though he had heard nothing; the two men exchanged a comforted glance and sat down to their meal. . . .

It was a pity that these two were such coarse and trivial souls. Kirke at least was an honest man and a gentleman. It was a great comfort to Arthur to be able to make that reflection because he had a very special matter on his mind. He knew that he wouldn't be able to hold in much longer. Vague suspicions of his had long solidified into facts. There was cruelty in the hospital. The nurses beat the patients. Now he was very well aware that this was a charge that could not be lightly brought. In the present hospital system a certain amount of physical coercion was sometimes wholly unavoidable. Patients who had agoraphobia might yet benefit by the open air. . . . A slight manic disturbance might pass over if the patient had to adjust herself to hospital routine. . . . Women patients were notoriously harder to manage than men. . . . Also the attendants were uneducated women working for a pittance at a hateful job. . . . To be too critical was to wipe out the system, and that wasn't the job of a young interne. . . . But Arthur had found bloody welts on the bodies of young women, swollen eyes, gussety bruises, arms almost wrenched out of their sockets. . . . Then he had come into the ward unexpectedly and found Miss Donovan dragging an elderly Jewess down by her hair and saying: "I'll beat you into a pulp. . . ." He had no rest or peace any more. He jumped up in the middle of the night. He cursed his imagination not to torment him with more than he knew and could establish. That was enough. . . .

He asked Kirke to spend the evening in his room and very calmly and objectively, with almost exaggerated casualness, introduced the subject.

Kirke nodded. "You're right, Doctor, it's a problem. I myself slip into the wards now and then when I'm not expected. I guess that's the best we can do. I wish we could have a better class of attendents. But how are you going to get that?"

"Perfectly true," Arthur agreed. "And I'm not asking the impossible. But I've got the goods on that Donovan woman to such an extent that it might clear the air for some time to come to fire her. What do you say?"

Kirke looked about him with a wandering gaze. Then he drew circles on the table between them with his inverted thumb. Finally he half-met Arthur's eyes.

"Fact is, Doctor, that we're up against a difficulty there."

"What difficulty?"

"Well, you see, Donovan is Duval's sweetie. They beat it off to New York together and raise the devil, and it's my private believe that she slips over into his room right here."

"Well," said Arthur, "I'm not supposed to know that. I'm rather sorry you told me."

Kirke got up. Whenever he wanted to be impressive he stood. "All right, Doctor. But look here: Donovan's a political appointee, isn't she? Can't be exactly fired without cause. Duval is the regular doctor on her ward. He'll give her a clean bill of health. It'll be his word against yours; he'll be raving mad. And if there's one thing that old man Foster won't stand for it's any aspersion on conditions here. If you think you'd have him with us—you're dead wrong."

The blood rose into Arthur's head. "In other words—anything short of murder goes?"

"No, Doctor, you're too pessimistic. We have fired attendants for cruelty and drunkenness and misbehavior. It just happens that Donovan has a drag with the State Commission and so has Duval. The consequence is that they'd fight. I'll be frank with you. If Duval didn't have a pull, would he be here? Oh, he's a good fellow and all that, but you'd hardly call him a—Well, never mind."

Arthur controlled himself. "Suppose you and I quietly lay the case before Foster and ask him to transfer Donovan to the men's side?"

Kirke started slowly toward the door. "Do as you like, Doctor. I must say that I certainly admire your spirit. But, for God's sake, leave me out. You can take risks that I can't. Your father is a rich manufacturer in New York City. Well, mine is a Methodist minister in the North Carolina mountains. I can't afford a professional black eye. Foster welcomes what he calls constructive criticism, anything that'll tend to make this a [illegible]

a more Christian place for the unfortunate. He doesn't like a knocker. And, when you got right down to it, nobody does, do they? So give me your word that you'll leave me out of it." He held out his hand.

Arthur took it. "I give you my word."

The little man was gone.

Arthur sat down at his desk and wrote his formal letter of resignation in duplicate: one copy for the State Commission, one for Dr. Foster. He stated briefly as his reason that he had discovered abuses which his conscience could not overlook and had been convinced at the same time that, under existing conditions, these abuses were not capable of being remedied. Next day he confronted Miss Donovan. He characterised her practices in a few stinging words, admitted his own powerlessness, and commended her to her conscience and that of her friend, Dr. Duval. She looked sleepy and sullen and made no reply. He turned back once more and saw the virago's muscular arm and threatening, up-raised, menacing fist. His heart fell. She would take out her rage on the Jewish patients. He had been an utter fool. . . .

Late that night he was awakened by a tumult in the hall. Duval had been to town. His tread was heavy; now and then he lurched against a wall or a door. In front of Arthur's door he stopped. "Yah!" he yelled. "Goddam foreigners—ought to be Goddam deported. All of 'em! Look at these Goddam foreigners—God, this country's gettin' so lousy with 'em—it stinks. Yah, it stinks! Guiney, wops, kikes! Jesus! Especially kikes. God damn interfering kikes! Yah hear me? I say God—damn—interfering—KIKES!"

Arthur's father said: "You here done right, my son. But do me a favor, will you? Tell Freefield ent rub it in a little. Eat don't vorry. Business is vonderful since some mont's. I'm prouder of you den if you het made a million."

Mr. Freefield's offices were now in a building on Broad Street that had a magnificent Roman portico with sixteen stories dwarfing the portico. Mr. Freefield sat in a huge luxurious room. His secretary's secretary took your name. You entered and walked through what seemed brilliant space to the gigantic mahogany desk and saw the glossy, heavy figure with its impassive, utterly weary, boundlessly disillusioned features.

"Sit down, young man."

Arthur said what he had to say with the most careful restraint and objectivity. Mr. Freefield sat impassive with closed, wrinkled eyes. He continued to sit thus for a full minute after Arthur had finished. Then he opened his eyes. They were wearier than ever.

"Ethically you are in the right. Practically I consider it a grave error, especially at this time in our country's history, for Jews to put themselves forward in any way that might be interpreted as a criticism of the existing order or its institutions. We have been, however wrongly, implicated with the Bolshevik crime. We should be conspicuous for law-abiding and constructive endeavor."

At certain moments Arthur could never keep from a touch of fury. "And we should let Jewish as well as other indigent patients be beaten."

Perceptibly Mr. Freefield turned toward Arthur; perceptibly the weary, impassive, official voice was lowered. "I am personally of the opinion that we should take care of our own sick of all kinds in Jewish institutions. But the calls upon our charities, especially today, are so vast, that that plan cannot be realized for many time to come."
